

Critical Thinking Education Group

A place for educators and others interested in helping students learn and improve critical thinking

Our Mission

The Critical Thinking Education Group (CTEG), seeks to promote lifelong critical thinking and learning, with an emphasis on teaching critical thinking in all levels of education.

Toward this objective we:

- Define critical thinking as the cognitive strategies employed to rationally evaluate information for its potential usefulness and accuracy.
- Seek to generate interest in learning and applying critical thinking to consumerism, politics, problem solving, and other aspects of life.
- Compile and maintain a library of resources such as curricula, classroom materials and demonstrations, and references for evidence based teaching of critical thinking.

Critical Thinking Education Group

A place for educators and others interested in helping students learn and improve critical thinking

This site was established with the intention of forming a community of educators, parents and other members of the global community who share a vision in promoting critical thinking skills. Here you will find resources, weblinks and a forum for discussing methods aimed at educating others in the skills and cultural values necessary for critical thought.

If you are a teacher, a parent, a babysitter, a sports coach... if you have any interactions with a young mind, or even with people who are not so young...it is important to know what makes somebody a critical thinker.

Please accept this invitation to join us in working toward promoting a global society of critical thinkers through education. Contribute to our library or just our discussions. Make friends and challenge ideas - someone else's or even your own. Make a difference!
